This spell allows the caster to transfer all the spells recorded in her spellbook to a new one. The writings disappear from the pages of the original book and appear exactly as they were on the pages of the new one. There is no way to alter or amend the content; it appears exactly as it was. There is no way to restore the writing to the old book afterwards – it has been moved and the book is blank.

This spell has three basic uses; to transfer the spells from an old and fragile book to a new one in better condition; to transfer spells from a smaller, full book to a new one with more blank pages so as to increase room to add more spells afterwards; and to temporarily move the spells to a book made of special materials in preparation for adventuring in unusual environments (eg thin metal sheets for underwater, or stone slabs for the Elemental Plane of Fire and so on).

Time for the process depends on the highest-level spells in the book. If the highest is 4th it takes 4 hours; a book with 9th level spells takes 9 hours.
